

Review process

Each manuscript is first reviewed by the editors-in-chief and the editorial board. The manuscript is then assessed by two reviewers. The basis of the review process is the completion of a review form by the reviewer, which may, especially in problematic cases with many critical comments, be supplemented by comments on the disputed passages directly in the manuscript. The review process is conducted in accordance with the ethical principles outlined below.

The review process is double blind.